

Semicolon and the Independent Clauses

Rewrite each compound sentence below using a semicolon instead of the conjunction.

1. Gayle liked meat loaf, but she likes shrimp better.
2. We don't have to go if it rains, and I hope it rains.
3. The library board met on Thursday, and it was an emergency meeting.
4. Thomas excelled in playing the tuba, yet he rarely needed to practice.
5. The movie ran late, so we talked while we waited.
6. There were five doughnuts left this morning, but now there are none.

Semicolon and the Independent Clauses

Rewrite each compound sentence below using a semicolon instead of the conjunction.

1. Gayle liked meat loaf, but she likes shrimp better.

Gayle liked meat loaf; she likes shrimp better.

2. We don't have to go if it rains, and I hope it rains.

We don't have to go if it rains; I hope it rains.

3. The library board met on Thursday, and it was an emergency meeting.

The library board met on Thursday; it was an emergency meeting.

4. Thomas excelled in playing the tuba, yet he rarely needed to practice.

Thomas excelled in playing the tuba; he rarely needed to practice.

5. The movie ran late, so we talked while we waited.

The movie ran late; we talked while we waited.

6. There were five doughnuts left this morning, but now there are none.

There were five doughnuts left this morning; now there are none.